There needs to have more explicit mention of disability access and Inclusion in the policy. There should also be a section about supporting the next generation of creatives. It's also important to recognise that the Deaf community is a culturally and linguistically diverse one, not a disability-based one.

It would also be good to connect creative practices to societal education and cohesion.

I also think it would be worth renaming the policy. When I first saw it I thought it was about multicultural Australia, not the Arts and Creative Culture of Australia (especially because cultural encapsulates more than the arts.) additionally, in the current climate having the policy named this could be divisive.
