If there's no backbone to support artistic development and creative growth then all of these efforts are just going continue to be vapid wastes of time and money consumed only by and made for the rich to not feel class guilt whilst the country sinks around them. There has not been a single piece of art of media that has fundamentally changed, shifted and most importantly elevated this country in over two decades. I wonder what changed for that to happen... nothing wrong with inclusivity and wanting to tell First Nations stories but the least you could do is provide all peoples of the nation the fundamental infrastructure for creative pursuits to allow a national cultural identity to form naturally! And we all wonder why we're about to be taken over by dimwitted corporate sell out fascists...
