My main issue is with the \"first nations first\" approach that the policy has outlined. It's all very well and good for first nations art and artists to be celebrated/supported, but should an ethnic group making up less than 4 percent of the population be pushed to celebrate their culture while others receive none of that same support?

This is a national policy that is not reflecting the cultural diversity of the nation. First nations people, are no longer the only people living here and our cultural policies should be reflecting that.
