I find the new National Cultural Policy confusing. The content seems to refer to Aboriginal cultural heritage but yet Australian post colonisation heritage is equally important as the national identity, which is enriched by multiculturalism of new migrants every year. The new national cultural policy should emphasize and embrace diversity, for example decriminalising and allowing various art forms and medium being used in public spaces. Freedom of expression that allowing political and democratic expressions are also equally important. These are the policies I'd like to see in the new National Cultural Policy that allowing truth telling of every Australian, from every cultural and socioeconomic background..
