Specifically around pillar two the idea of creating place for art making is essential here in Brisbane. We have a council level funded street art festival That happens once a year that just lost its funding last year. Places where creative people can go and create art either collectively or individually are far & few between. Previous eras young broke artists could pool together resources to share a house turn it into a creative space or even find ways to rent warehouse space if necessary those days are over. Property is an investment vehicle. Nobody let alone young broke artists can get access to space. The investment in spaces for artists is critical. art making has become a luxury that only the wealthy can enjoy because they have no responsibilities & the means to live without exchanging their time for money. Creating public spaces for art making will build community, inspire the next generation of artists, and show the world that Australian culture is more than footy & property hoarding
