Mainly that iculture should be more widely spread. The country is so diverse because of its geograghy and size. Within that lie cells of culture that are particular to their area based on human habitation, climate, topograhly and industry . When I experience culture different to my own (what I have been exposed to) I learn in a way that is not only knowledge enriching but fascinating. I feel how there are so many people who will never experience differences because they remain within their own cultural cells. The policy should be less about creating cultural hubs and more about spreading cultural knowledge between places. A type of exchange so that culture becomes a learning experience which allows opportunity for submersion and inclusion and is less concentrated, inbred and insular. The policy should open the field of experience to more people so it fosters more knowledge and in turn more tolerance and enrichment
